

DANCE OF THE ATOMIC STRUCTURE

SATURN SHOWERS
BRING
METHANE FLOWERS

A space-themed background featuring a partial view of Earth on the left, the Moon at the top center, and Mars on the bottom right. The scene is filled with numerous white stars of varying sizes against a black background.

Surrounded by stars, we approach a red planet, Mars, which fades into a dark orb as we reach the end of our first song and the beginning of another.

RADAR

Radar (Track 1)

Our sonic journey begins as we are lifted off of Earth and through its atmosphere toward the heavens. We wave goodbye as we pass the moon.

Ebb and Flow (Track 2)

Nearing the Asteroid Belt, we marvel at the intricate waltz these massive pebbles are performing for us as we navigate our way through their starry ballroom.

EBB AND FLOW

A gas giant, Jupiter, beckons us from a distance. As our song ends, we make our exit from the rocky dance and close in on colossal Jupiter.

In such an empty space, we have nowhere to look but inward toward ourselves. The low humming of engines lulls us into a sleepy withdrawal as does the ending of our song.

AMPLITUDE MODULATION SOLILOQUY

Amplitude Modulation Soliloquy (Track 3)

In the wake of our voyage beyond Jupiter and its stormy eyes, we begin to transmit the data we have collected back to Earth in an effort to feel connected, as we have entered a darkened void.

Saturn Showers Bring Methane Flowers (Track 4)

We awaken to the sight of our favorite Titan, Saturn, and its marvelous rings. Our view of the giant changes as we dart from moon to moon, tentatively exploring before weaving through its rocky outcrop of rings and finally diving into its atmosphere

SATURN SHOWERS BRING METHANE FLOWERS

As we skim through clouds of methane, we playfully dance toward the conclusion of our expedition.
